

Figure 1: The three elements of a well-structured title slide.

Description: Main elements to be included are title, names and affiliations of the authors, and the symbol of the research group.

Explanation: These main elements ensure that the audience readily knows your topic, affiliations, and identity. Placing these essential elements at the beginning of the presentation ensures that they are not forgotten. Implication: After viewing this slide, the audience members will know if they are at the correct presentation. Audience members will also have an opportunity to take down the presenter's contact details, if they have further questions or requests for additional information.
